ABOUT THE CONFERENCE:

Pandemics, disasters, conflicts, environmental disruptions and economic crisis characterize today's era. Crisis Management, as the term suggests, refers to the processes involved in prevention, mitigation, response and recovery to restore normalcy and stability during disruptive events that threatens societies, organizations and individuals. In simple terms, it refers to the effective handling of emergencies like climate-induced disasters, geopolitical conflicts, regional tensions, economic crisis, cybersecurity threats and the like through planning, communication, resource management and decision-making. Beyond immediate relief, such conflicts require long-term approaches to recovery through the development of policy and institutional mechanisms that promote peace and stability, fostered by collaborations among civil society, states, and international organizations.

The Conference, set against this backdrop, solicits scholarly contributions that focus on an analytical enquiry on global crisis management. The conference encourages evidence-based research and critical enquiry and promotes solution-oriented approaches that empowers sustainable futures. Additionally, it aims to provide an interdisciplinary platform for discussion to bridge the gap between theory and practice and foster dialogues that facilitate an inclusive and ethical model of responding to the global challenges of 21st century.
